What Does the EPD Have to Hide?

Editor:

It's very sad that our government officials spend so much of their time, and our money, making sure we don't know what they're up to. The police camera case is by no means the only example, but it's especially ironic ("Argumentative," June 30). When someone refuses consent to a search, or refuses to answer questions, the police always ask, "What do you have to hide?" So, EPD: What do you have to hide?

Jamie Flower, Arcata

In Gratitude

Editor:

I want to thank everyone in my district's communities, far and wide, for going to the polls and voting to re-elect me as your 2nd District county supervisor (NCJ Daily, June 9). I am humbled and honored by your overwhelming support and I see it as a huge vote of confidence in my work to move our county forward.

I also want to give a big "Thank You!" to my hard working campaign team and all of the volunteers that put in the endless hours that led to my successful campaign.

Thank you to the hundreds of local businesses and community members that supported me, endorsed me and donated to my campaign.

I love my job and it is an honor to serve you and Humboldt County.

I will continue working hard for you and with you because, as I have often said, "Working Together, that's what gets things done!"

Remember, if you have ideas, issues or concerns you can reach me by phone at 476-2392 or by email efennell@co.humboldt.ca.us.

You could also drop by my field offices:

Fortuna Vets Hall, Main Street, Fortuna: 9 a.m. to noon on Thursdays, and at 709 Cedar St. in Garberville (behind the library) from 9 a.m. to noon on Fridays.

Thank you again!

Big Apple, Big Cheese

Editor:

At the small cafe on the fourth floor of the Met, my daughter and I noticed the Dick Taylor chocolate bars being sold on the very small counter by the cash register ("The Chocolate Factory," Aug. 6, 2015).

The only other packaged food item was tiny bags of peanuts. We both thought that to occupy space here speaks to the quality of this candy made in [Eureka]. We are talking about the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City.

At our last group dinner at the Sojourn Restaurant, one of the friendly waiters, on hearing that we were from Humboldt, remarked that their cooks use Humboldt Fog cheese in many of their small plates. Very superior cheese, he said.

In the same vein, my granddaughter visited a college friend staying at her parents' apartment on the Upper West Side. In looking at the pictures adorning the walls, she discovered an old poster advertising the Arcata Farmers Market, painted by Alan Sanborn.

In a city of 8.5 million residents, 3,000 miles distant from Humboldt, these touches of home delighted us and brought us a sense of pride and comfort.

only folks looking forward to the green rush are realtors. We know how soulless most of them are. They don't give a damn about anything but their fees and commissions."

Concerning realtors, this is a professional entity which operates (enforced by-laws) with a high level of fidelity with a legally enforced fiduciary duty. Discriminating according to race, religion or occupation is not tolerated. Fiduciary duty means putting the clients' objectives ahead of yours. It is a very competitive business and not all thrive in the long term. The vast majority, if not all of the real estate professionals, operate with high ethics in Humboldt County because the Humboldt Association of Realtors monitors members and they take it very seriously. If you mess up, the association will revoke your license. They also, through Realtors, have donated more than $1 million to local charities and scholarships since inception. This group has shown a high level of love and soul in our communities. It has been an honor to work with a group of professionals sharing the lofty ideals the association espouses.

Your concerns on inflated home prices due to the "green rush" are understood, we do need affordable housing. We need to protect the small farmer from the mega corporations. Hopefully you and many others will find jobs in the green rush and buy a fixer and put some sweat equity into it. Be diligent and disciplined and you can do it. When renting, you do avoid losing money if the home market drops. It is a long-term investment and there are many that owe more than their home is worth. Lobby for affordable housing and code changes that would allow for a denser small home affordable subdivision.

Don't give up on the dream of owning a home.

Dave Raney, Willow Creek

Correction

A column in the June 30, 2016 edition of the North Coast Journal headlined "The Sweet Spot" contained some inaccurate numbers due to several atrocious arithmetic errors. A 43,580 square foot marijuana grow can reasonably be expected to yield 435 pounds of processed marijuana a year, which would wholesale for approximately $435,000. Under the tax schemes currently being considered the state Assembly and the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors, the grower would see a tax bill of about $64,469 from the state and $43,580 from the county, for a combined bill of $108,049. The Journal regrets the errors.

Community members off Highway 36 bemoan rapid growth of cannabis industry

By Linda Stansberry

linda@northcoastjournal.com

Every folding chair in the Bridgeville school gym was pressed into use on June 30, as the room filled with more than 100 community members. They came from neighboring communities, from Dinsmore and Hydesville and Mad River and all points in between. Mothers nursing babies, senior citizens with perfectly coiffed hair, sun-burned young men with T-shirts tucked into jeans, they came to stare down 10 officials from the public agencies directly related to the county's recent medical marijuana and land use ordinances, and to ask the question that, over the course of three hours, no one seemed to answer with any clarity: What is going to happen to our community?

"We feel like since they passed the ordinance, the whole world is here trying to make a big buck. They don't care about the land or the community," said Pam Walker, who organized the community meeting and led the opening remarks. Walker was one of several people from the Bridgeville and Larabee Valley area who went to Humboldt County 2nd District Supervisor Estelle Fennel's office last month to voice concerns about an increased number of commercial grows and associated water overuse, illegal grading, dangerous driving and public safety issues.

Fennel, who facilitated the meeting, invited representatives from the North Coast Regional Water Quality Board, Humboldt County Sheriff's Office, California Highway Patrol, California Department of Fish and Wildlife and the Humboldt County Planning and Building Department to answer questions and address community concerns. Bridgeville and its neighboring hamlets are at least an hour away from the nearest hospital, far away from the seat of county government, and rely on a patchwork of homespun volunteer organizations, such as the community center, volunteer fire departments and Southern Trinity Ambulance Rescue to augment a dearth of official resources. For decades the community, accessible only by the narrow and winding State Route 36, with its western borders bottlenecked by a state park, has been largely self-reliant and insular. But its very remoteness, combined with recent changes in the state and county medical marijuana laws, has made it a popular place for outsiders hoping to strike it rich in the "green rush." They're not pioneers; cultivation is woven into the fabric of the local culture. But the new arrivals, Walker and others argue, unfairly tax both the social and environmental resources of the community, while giving little to nothing back. And the county, whose land use ordinance they allege enticed these growers into the area, is providing little in the way of oversight or protection.

Water usage was at the top of an ambitious agenda. Many people in the area rely on wells, which they use sparingly in the summer to accommodate neighboring homesteaders who share the same water table. The aquifers and streams are inadequate to support commercial agriculture. But, of course, that's now exactly what they're being used for: Under new county medical marijuana laws, permitted grows are not allowed to truck in water from an outside source. New wells are being dug, and many people complain that their own wells, creeks and springs are running dry far ahead of schedule. Who, they asked the representatives, is regulating this?

"Nobody," said Scott Bauer, a biologist with the CDFW, referring to the question of groundwater. Rob Wall, interim county planning director, added that California is one of the last states in the nation to regulate groundwater. As for creeks and streams, violations can be reported to the state water control board or other entities for investigation.

Well, asked community members, can they report trucks stacked with fertilizer or water tanks speeding around the turns? Yes, came the reply, but carrying soil or water is not illegal in and of itself. And the sheriff and CHP are both understaffed, largely, they said, due to a lack of qualified candidates. A new resident deputy assigned to the area, Benjamin Filippini, is due to start in October. He recently graduated from the College of the Redwoods Police Academy.

"Where will you be stationed?" asked one older woman.

"Hydesville, ma'am," he replied.

"Hydesville! It will take you 40 minutes to get anywhere."

"20 minutes, ma'am."

"Well, then you're flying, young man," she said, to a round of laughter.

There was a general sense of disconnect between the crowd and the public officials around the issue of permitting. Senior County Planner Steve Lazar repeated several times that it would take some time for the industry to transition into legality and, once the tax revenue kicks in, there will be more money available for enforcement.

"We're waiting for the cannabis community to move forward and get licensed. This is a community of folks who are not prepared to flip the switch," said Lazar, asking for patience.

The crowd seemed less than receptive to this idea. With the Aug. 31 deadline for registration approaching, the county says 308 grows have registered, with 34 in the Van Duzen watershed. But many growers are moving forward without approved permits, and still more are operating without any kind of permit whatsoever, as they have for decades. Fennel said unregulated growth has perpetuated a sense of lawlessness that will soon come to an end.

"You're not going to get by with pulling the wool over our eyes," she said. "Eventually, we're going to get you."

There was some muttering at this statement. While many of the representative agencies repeatedly asked residents to report issues, with the sheriff's office insisting its response was "complaint driven," many are reluctant to do so. An anonymous complaint is never anonymous, they implied, in a place where everyone knows his or her neighbors. (Many of those in the audience did not want their names or photos used in this article.) One woman, balancing her toddler on her hip, said she called the sheriff's office several times when neighbors threatened her young family with violence.

"They clearcut 5 acres that weren't theirs, are growing in the creekbed, have no water, their pitbulls are attacking my livestock, and I worry about them attacking my children," she said.

"We're complaint driven. Call us, let us know," came the reply.

"I have been calling, nobody's doing anything," she said, to a flurry of nods.

Later her partner, an Iraq War veteran, stood and also addressed the officers. He alleged that the same neighbors, four men, attacked and beat him during a confrontation about water use. Officers met him at the hospital but did not take steps to protect him or his family, or enforce an existing restraining order, he alleged. (The HCSO confirmed this incident is under investigation.)

"I stuck my neck out for this country," said the young man. "I deserve to be protected too."

His words were met with a round of applause.

"My son is going to bed with a plastic sword every night," he went on, adding that the neighbors had also threatened to hurt their children. "I don't have the ability to keep my family safe. I'm losing faith that this will go anywhere."

As the meeting wore on into the late afternoon, a theme developed. The agencies asked for better communication, and the community members asked for better representation. With a complex tangle of various regulatory agencies governing unincorporated areas, complaints were often volleyed from one bureau to another. Sheriff Mike Downey encouraged people to show up to planning department meetings. Lazar said until permitting was standardized and had funded enforcement, complaints would have to go to the sheriff's office. Ultimately, many of the issues fall into the empty spaces once governed by simple human kindness and a sense of community. With only four CHP officers to cover all of Humboldt County at any given hour, for example, what are the chances that one will be available to arrest the reckless drivers crossing the highway's double yellow line to pass the school bus, as its driver Tim Smith said has happened "countless times" in the last year? The bus has been run off the road at least once, with Smith forced to slam on the brakes to avoid an accident. Law enforcement officers have encouraged him to call in license plates and, since Smith has to keep his eyes on the road, he has recruited the terrified children to keep track of the numbers for him. Next year, due to budget cuts, the tiny school may not have a bus at all. Its enrollment numbers have been steadily dropping due to safety concerns and families being priced out of the area. One mother said she routinely leaves her child at home rather than drive with her in the car, and it chafes to see "million dollar trucks" roaring down the road when community institutions are struggling to stay afloat.

At the close of the meeting, Fennel thanked the community for opening the dialogue.

"Some of these issues are very, very tough," she said. "I'm glad to be able to have that conversation."

Reached by phone the next day, Walker said that although many questions remain unanswered, she was "very, very proud" of her community for showing up and speaking out. ●

Canna-unionize?

By Colin Trujillo

Union leaders are talking about normal union concerns in a dimly lit Arcata bar. There are cocktails all around. They talk about safety, protecting jobs, keeping wages high, changing laws and providing training and education for workers and employers. Although these sound like run-of-the-mill union concerns, this is not your typical union. This is the Humboldt Medical Cannabis Union (HMCU), a group working to protect cannabis jobs in Humboldt County and bring farmers and workers out from the underground and into legitimacy.

There is a lot of fear in Humboldt about vanishing jobs and a shrinking economy. After all, we have seen this before when the bottoms fell out of logging and fishing. Estimates vary, but some place the value of Humboldt's cannabis economy as high as $1 billion and conservative estimates based on data from the Humboldt County Sheriff's Office and the California Department of Fish and Wildlife suggest the industry employs more than 20,000 people. These are people who spend money in local stores and restaurants, raise families and buy homes. The question then is, as we move toward legalization, how do we keep those jobs while making them safer and more reliable?

Humboldt County has the workforce, knowledge base and a lot of the infrastructure, but we lag behind the rest of the state when it comes to adapting to the new legal climate. Many growers appear reluctant to go legitimate, fearing lower profits, stricter regulations and greater competition. There is an outlaw mentality and an old way of doing things that is difficult to break away from. Brian Shields, founder of the HMCU, wants to change that by bringing the workforce out of the shadows and to the forefront of new state regulations.

A lot has changed in the last couple years. The state finally passed regulations for its 20-year-old medical marijuana industry, requiring those who want to grow medical cannabis to get a license. Just this year, through Assembly Bill 26, a bill backed by the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, the Legislature decided that in order to get and keep that license, workers must be certified. The HMCU has been working hard to create one of the first certification programs in the state. "The cannabis industry is coming into the light and all of these farms are going to have to come into compliance," explains Jason Valentin, a HMCU board member and local restaurateur who owns Crush and Harvest in Arcata.

Shields says HMCU's certification program would meet all of the requirements set out by A.B. 26, including training on current medical cannabis commercial cultivation policy, union education and history, labor law, California workplace safety requirements and sexual harassment training. It isn't going to happen overnight, but the union is working fast and reaching out to other organizations that share its vision. HMCU will be partnering with True Humboldt to enroll 20 to 30 people in a pilot certification program as early as this month.

In order to quickly roll out a certification program that will meet state standards, the union is working with local organizations that provide similar trainings for more traditional businesses. Shields recently had lunch at Lost Coast Brewery with former Humboldt County Labor Commissioner Kurt Barthel, who said he's been waiting for someone to approach him about this for 30 years. The Humboldt County Agriculture Department is going to offer training on safe handling of pesticides and fertilizers to union members free of charge. There is a lot of community interest in protecting Humboldt's economy, environment and people.

Not only does unionization have the potential to help the industry but it can also protect workers. Sexual harassment training is not only required by the state but essential to protecting some of the industry's most vulnerable workers, especially trimmers. Elyn Henderson, who co-founded HMCU with Shields, started working in the industry as a trimmer when she was 15 years old. "After eight years of being a trimmer and two years as a scene manager, I knew there was a need," says Henderson, who holds an environmental policy degree from Humboldt State University. "Sexual harassment is definitely prevalent."

It's easy to see how training on safety and sexual harassment could protect workers and employers in Humboldt, but how does it protect wages and jobs? HMCU believes Humboldt County becoming the first in the state to have certified workers and farms would go a long way. After all, it isn't a matter of bringing new jobs into the area, but of keeping the ones we have as the industry undergoes a major paradigm shift. When it comes to wages, the union is banking on businesses paying more for highly skilled and well trained workers. "How do you justify paying $200 a pound for trimmers?" asks Shields. "You do it by having well trained and educated trimmers."

Shields isn't the only one who believes that well trained, safe workers are better for business. Bryan Willkomm, general manager of the Humboldt Patient Resource Center (HPRC) in Arcata, says the dispensary's staff enjoy competitive pay, benefits, free gym memberships and an OSHA compliant workplace. HPRC has been operating in Arcata for 17 years and, according to Willkomm, has "been in a constant state of flux with new permits, federal threats, new regulations, conditional use permits, commercial cannabis activity permits, building codes, OSHA compliance, ADA access, and more." Willkomm says the first cannabis union he heard of in the marketplace was "stifled with corruption and bribes and did not truly dedicate itself to cannabis industry workers." Still the HPRC would be open to hearing from any union that operates transparently, Willkomm says, adding that its 18 employees would never be forbidden from unionizing.

The HMCU is growing, having nearly doubled in size from 11 to 20 members over the last six months. Still membership only represents a tiny fraction of the estimated 20,000 people currently working in the black/grey market. A lot of people are still reluctant to come into the open. Michael Kraft, a senior project manager at Sequoia Personnel Services, expert on local labor issues and former head of the Northern California Small Business Development Center, believes one of the biggest challenges will be getting people to come forward and fill out paperwork that could potentially land them on a list or in a database. Multiple growers were contacted for this story but none were willing to be publicly identified or to speak on the record.

While some farms are eager to be among the first to legitimize, many farmers and workers have a "wait and see" attitude. Willkomm agrees the transition will be hard for local some local farmers. "Understanding that your trimmers can no longer work 12 hours straight without proper facilities for bathroom use and scheduled breaks, and that gardeners must be protected with safe pesticide application information and equipment is tough for some individuals," he says. He believes many farmers are making the extra effort to be compliant, but it is challenging when the legal landscape is continually changing.

In the meantime, HMCU's certification program is moving forward and the union is still actively courting new members. HMCU's vision for the future includes not just training, but providing a certified labor pool as well. Currently, membership dues are $25 a month. Will Shields and Henderson succeed in their lofty goals of protecting the local economy, workers, farmers and the environment? Time will tell, but the potential benefits are undeniable. The union is happy to take new members, but the goal is really to protect the people that are already here, who have been here — the local community. According to Shields "you need a unified voice for the community. HMCU is that voice."

Grand Jury Blasts County Procurement Procedures

The county is not adequately tracking how millions of dollars in public funds are being spent, the Humboldt County civil grand jury alleged in a report released June 29.

The report alleges a lack of accountability, transparency and oversight in the county's contract and procurement processes. Over the last decade, an increasing number of county departments have been consolidated, which the HCCGJ says is partially responsible for "a duplication of efforts in the contract process and a lack of regular review for millions of dollars of county expenditures."

Procurement — the process of buying supplies, equipment or third-party services — is usually overseen by a single contract administrator, who only attaches his or her name to projects that have received his or her scrutiny. But the rules governing this process in Humboldt County are allegedly slipshod, with "no consistent terminology describing roles in the contract writing or review process," according to the report. The county administrative officer was also occasionally excluded from this process, the report alleges. Each individual branch within the county appears to have its own individual systems in place for hiring and evaluating contracts, rather than a uniform process used across the county administration.

The scope of the grand jury's investigation included all contracts of more than $50,000, which are supposed to receive approval from the Board of Supervisors. In its investigation of the 2015-2016 county budget, the grand jury attempted to determine how many contracts were current, the total dollar amounts for those contracts and what percentage of the county budget those contracts represented. Unfortunately, the HCCGJ "was informed by various departments that the answers were unknown and/or unavailable." When the jury asked for additional information in order to analyze the procurement process, it was told the same thing: The information was unknown or unavailable. This response, the report notes drily, "raises several questions."

The investigation also revealed a common practice of splitting contracts that totaled at more than $50,000, therefore bypassing the need for approval from the Board of Supervisors, and an inadequate system for tracking the performance and reliability of vendors.

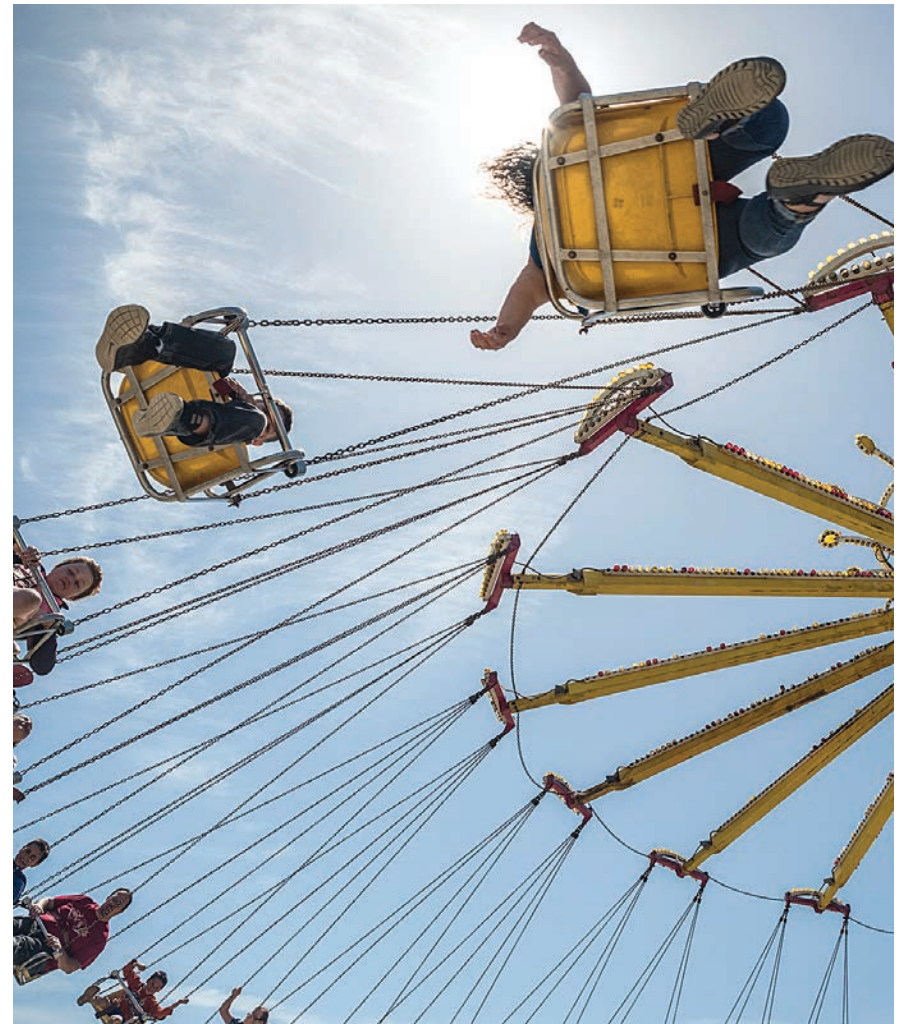

Moreover, there is "no apparent" system in place to make sure vendors are actually performing according to specifications, and when there is a system in place, there is little to no oversight ensuring that it is actually being followed.

To remedy these issues, the jury recommended creating an "impartial, experienced group of experts" to review contracts and purchasing. It also supports the consolidation of several positions within the finance department as a starting point to create a centralized system.

The Growing Divide

By Piper McDaniel

The Growing Divide is an online documentary project that uses photography and a series of 25 interviews with residents, marijuana growers, police officers and government officials to tell the story of the marijuana boom in the rural community of Hayfork, California.

With photographs by Talia Herman and Brian Grossman, and with support from California Humanities, a nonprofit partner of the National Endowment for the Humanities, and the Humboldt Area Foundation, the result is a multi-faceted look at the marijuana industry in the microcosm of a small, rural community. Read on for excerpts from this project, and view it in its entirety online at: www.thegrowingdivide.com.

The Marijuana Industry Goes Boom

In the rural town of Hayfork, California, marijuana has become a defining element. Marijuana gardens are almost as numerous as people, with cultivation so prevalent that gardens are visible from most roads. It is the primary source of employment, and the reality of black market income is culturally commonplace. Here, the impacts of marijuana are amplified by the realities of rural living. Isolation, a lack of resources and poverty have created the space for marijuana to become a major economic, political and social driver.

Hayfork is located in the mountains of Trinity County. Spanning 3,208 square miles, the county is dominated by U.S. Forest Service land that occupies 80 percent of the territory within its borders. The population logs in at just over 13,000. The communities are small, isolated and sprinkled through the vast stretch of forest like the stars of a constellation.

For law enforcement, the geographical realities of this rural county, combined with a severe lack of funding, limit the ability to manage marijuana farming, creating a mood and reality of relative lawlessness. The Trinity County Sheriff's Department currently operates with one to four deputies serving the county at any given time. The travel time between communities is anywhere between 40 minutes to two hours. This means response time for law enforcement can be up to two hours, depending on where you are. In some circumstances, law enforcement may not have the capacity to come at all.

Hayfork has endured a high rate of poverty for decades. As of the most recent U.S. Census, the estimated population is 2,480. An informal survey of existing jobs in Hayfork counted a total of just 424 in 2015. Of these, only 216 were full-time, with 108 part-time jobs and another 100 seasonal jobs. Of the 216 full-time jobs, 137 were in the retail or service industries, which typically pay minimum wage, and are unlikely to offer healthcare benefits.

Employment outside the retail sector includes only a handful of options, such as the school district and the U.S. Forest Service, or requires at least a 40-minute commute to towns outside the valley. Self-employment alternatives typically consist of odd jobs like construction, landscaping and farm work, or work tied to logging, such as tree falling and firewood sales. These self-employment options are often seasonal, don't offer full-time work and generally don't provide an income that will lift someone out of poverty. As of 2013, nearly a quarter of the population — 26.9 percent — lived below the poverty line.

When Proposition 215 passed in 1996, ushering in the medical marijuana era, Hayfork was suffering from a severe economic depression. In this environment of reduced legal risk and limited job options, more and more locals began growing and selling marijuana. At the same time, people began traveling into the mountains of Hayfork seeking a way to earmark a portion of weed money. It eventually earned a reputation as a place that offered inexpensive raw land with good growing conditions and greater freedom for the outlaw. More and more people began arriving in Hayfork, purchasing land and setting up marijuana farms. The marijuana growing population got bigger but the capacity of law enforcement stayed the same. In effect, the more people who were growing weed, the less risky the business became.

In a town with a population of 2,368, the sheriff's department estimates that there are currently 2,000 individual marijuana grows in Hayfork, although estimates from other agencies suggest the number is actually a bit smaller. The industry is booming, bringing with it a complex variety of benefits and drawbacks that are altering the trajectory of the town and shaping its future.

While top-down marijuana policy has been slowly brewing for decades, Hayfork residents are already living another reality shaped from the bottom up. As California continues to sort out the terms of marijuana legislation and how it can function in the state economy, Hayfork is enacting it in exaggerated terms. All this policy is borne out in the community, where people are enmeshed in this evolving industry. With the regulatory mood tipping toward a future of legalization, the outcome could bring drastic changes, leaving the community in uncharted territory.

The Growing Divide

Growing marijuana is so commonplace it's become brazen. Driving into the Hayfork valley, gardens populate the stretch of rolling hills on either side of the road, visible between houses and popping up behind makeshift fences. Late in the growing season when plants are budding, pungent marijuana scents the air, detectable to those driving through town. Along State Route 3, the sole main road through town, a windshield survey counted 42 plainly visible marijuana gardens in a 7.4-mile stretch of road.

Marijuana is a part of everyday life here. Participation in a black market drug trade is woven into the fabric of the community and has become somehow ordinary. Evidence of growing is easily gathered and also taken for granted. People speak with openness about what they're doing because there is an underlying assumption that most people are involved in the industry in some capacity or another. In this tiny mountain town, marijuana gardens have risen like a slow tide, saturating the neighborhoods, the remote mountains and valleys, the intimate landscape of this place.

With all this farming, there have been changes, good and bad, and the determination varies depending on whom you ask. It is here where the bitter crack of division begins to fragment the town.

At worst, the industry is perceived as immoral and exploitive, an illegal enterprise drawing on the land and damaging the community in the name of profit. Under this rubric, the problems are personified: Growers are characterized as self-interested, greedy and indifferent to the damage they do to the community and the land. This worst version is true in some cases, but not across the board.

In practice, there is a lot of variation in what profit motive looks like. Economic hardship, or the often grim reality of the existing alternatives that prompt so many people into an illegal industry are important motivators, but they are not part of a common understanding of what's happening. The questions of why so many people are choosing the risk of a black market industry, and what this means, isn't really being asked.

As an industry that has emerged in an impoverished area, many locals identify marijuana as the economic glue holding the town together, and see it as a potential bridge to long-term economic development. It has created jobs, supplemented incomes and supported local businesses. It is also credited by many as the single draw for new arrivals, adding to the human resources and cultural diversity of the town, and supporting increased activities and new opportunities.

But these benefits come at an expense. Unregulated marijuana production has brought with it significant environmental damage in the form of water use, clear-cutting, bulldozing, sediment runoff and inputs such as fertilizer and pesticides. It also imports the dangers associated with an illegal drug trade, giving more traditionally dangerous criminal types an opportunity where there wasn't one before.

The division in the community is rooted in the tangible: not having enough water, seeing the landscape around you bulldozed, or being suddenly crowded by strangers in local grocery stores when you used to know the entire town. Or, if you're farming, having access to income or the ability to secure property or buy a home, to live more comfortably, or the palpable fear of being reported and losing your entire crop. The end result has been a time of escalating contention, with citizens from all facets returning to Board of Supervisors meetings again and again to advocate for their contradictory goals.

The complicated truth is that the ability to label the industry as good or bad becomes impossible, especially in a time when its very legality is transitioning. Currently, the Trinity County Board of Supervisors is revising its own marijuana cultivation ordinances. With a polarized spectrum of voices speaking loudly and new state legislation paving the way, decisions with far-reaching implications rest in the supervisors' laps.

Shades of Green: Marijuana Growers

People have been growing marijuana in Hayfork for generations. Some have made their living this way for decades. Some have farmed to supplement their income, and some just for personal supply. In the rising arc of the weed boom, more and different types of farmers have arrived, adding numbers to their ranks and layers to their demographics.

Now such a large portion of the population is producing marijuana that growers

Father and Son

Tom has lived in Hayfork almost all of his 74 years. It's where he raised his three kids. He worked at a sawmill for 17 years and out in the woods felling trees for another 18. He saw two mills close and was around to watch his community slide into economic ruin when its sole industry, logging, collapsed in the early 1990s. Tom has grown marijuana since 1973, first just to grow his own smoke and later to supplement his income. Now Tom works for his 50-year-old son Dan, who is also a retired logger, on his grow operation. Here are excerpts from two interviews, the first with Tom and the second with both Tom and Dan.

Q: What was it like when the mills closed?

Tom: The first one devastated the town. Houses weren't worth a lot, people sold houses and moved away ... I couldn't move. The other (second mill closure) was devastating. There were no jobs for people.

Q: Why did you start growing marijuana?

Tom: Because it was legal and I needed the money. I only make $1,500 a month for social security, for me and my wife. That isn't good money. I had land, but I needed a new house and I had to have a way to pay. But there were no work opportunities. I had a five-way bypass heart attack. I got a defibrillator put in — keeps my heart going right. There's not much work I can do but I can sit in a chair (and process marijuana).

Q: How did you end up growing marijuana?

Dan: It's just kind of in the blood from being a kid.

Tom: They would come home (and help) and were makin' some money, too.

Dan: I trimmed as a kid (when I was) 8, 9, 10 ... 11.

Tom: (He) slept with it.

Dan: Oh (curing marijuana) would hang on lines in my back bedroom.

Tom: (laughing) That's what he smelled like going to school.

Q: (To Tom) Did you worry about your kids being around pot like that?

Tom: Nope. Because they're gonna make that choice sooner or later.

Q: Do you feel like you're contributing to the negative impacts (growing has) on the community?

Dan: Yes, I do feel like I'm part of the problem. I mean, I am part of the grow society that brings the thieves into town, and the trimmings into town, and the tweakers, and everything else. But personally, I do it differently. I don't include those kinds of people. I don't associate with those kinds of people ... and it's still federally illegal, but I sent the government checks for two years. On my income taxes, I got an I-9 for selling clones and they didn't send it back. They accepted it as payment for taxes, money that I made selling marijuana ...

Joseph, 51, a long-term grower and marijuana activist, standing in his marijuana garden. Joseph remembers farming before Proposition 215 when the risks were far greater. "I've never been in a combat zone," he says. "But, I can't imagine that I'll ever have a closer headspace than working then. You would hear helicopters and you would go diving into the bushes. You never knew when the day would come when they (law enforcement) would drop down." Photo by Piper McDaniel are integrated into many, maybe most, aspects of the community — as neighbors, store owners, parents of school children, volunteers and members of clubs and organizations. The end result leaves many people straddling two worlds, living otherwise typical lives while flirting with the risks of illegal industry — farming, selling on the black market and negotiating the transport and sales of product.

Marijuana is no longer simply a trade for brazen activists or large-scale, profiteering criminals, although both are still present. An industry that was once the territory of drug cartels and illicit drug dealers is now saturated with everyday people. Marijuana growers are retirees and single moms, they provide the second income in two-income families, they are parents and grandparents. For those living it, the navigation of the black market has become domesticated.

For some, marijuana cultivation is a solution to the imposition of economic hardship, as with retirees and out of work loggers who turn to the marijuana growing industry to help supplement their income. Their circumstances don't offer many alternatives and not having access to this income would drop them into poverty.

"Instead of living, you're existing," Dan says of what his life would be like without the income provided by growing. Dan is a logger who looks to marijuana to supplement his income and to help provide work for his retired father.

"Even when I've worked, it was seasonal," he says, "and so when you work a seasonal job, you're still only gonna make something like $22,000 a year, that's not even $2,000 a month gross, and you can exist on that but you can't live on it ... growing was definitely a way to give myself some of the better things, and give myself more opportunities."

For others, it can be a way to grasp a middle-class life when it wouldn't otherwise be possible. Parents might gain the ability to provide music lessons or other opportunities for their children. Couples may gain the ability to purchase land that would have otherwise been inaccessible to them. Growers represent a spectrum of lifestyles and backgrounds — career travelers, artists, arrivals from cities seeking a way to support a rural lifestyle, or those with careers that don't pay well enough to provide financial security.

Marijuana is becoming more legitimate, and the commonality of the black market has made illegal activity in this context more acceptable. By and large, growers don't believe marijuana should be illegal: They are breaking a law they don't believe in. And this creates some comfort with the black market, even if the terms aren't ideal.

While there are many variations among farmers, all have accepted the inherent risks of life as a black market marijuana grower. The profit is burdened by the fears and stresses of getting caught, and carries with it a host of other uncertainties about future livelihood.

The profitability of the marijuana trade isn't guaranteed. As more and more people are participating, the increase in supply has dropped prices. Growers report that a pound of weed that formerly netted $4,000 sells today for much less; $1,200 is a common price and pounds can go for as little as $800, a drastic drop in profitability that prompts many to increase production and farm bigger.

Variables in output, the expense of farming, the cost of paying work crews and the ability to sell at a decent price all take their toll on profit. As any farmer knows, there are many opportunities during the raising of a crop for things to go wrong, and for your profit margin to shrink.

And as any black market grower knows, there is also ample opportunity to be outdone by the perils of illegal drug trade — busts, theft, robberies, short-changing and rip-offs are real risks. All these variables drive home an often hard-learned truth about the marijuana industry: Its profitability really varies.

Even for those who have broken into the industry and are successful, long-term economic security is still in question. How long a person can continue to make their income through black market trade is an unknown. Shifts in the political landscape translate to economy — what happens with legalization will determine the viability of the legitimate and black markets.

For the faction of community members who are advocating for farming, the response to these uncertainties is to shape the development of the legitimate pot economy. In line with the larger political scene, local voices in Hayfork are advocating for regulatory policies that will support the existing economy through legal production and create a tenable industry for small-scale farmers. How they are able to mobilize and successfully advocate for their goals will help determine what options are available to them over time.

Others are waiting it out in various ways — working to set themselves up in preparation for market crashes, growing more while it's still profitable and low-risk, or just watching to see what happens next. Their futures are tied to the unstable currents of the marijuana economy and the outcomes of regulation. For growers, it is an era of uncertainty, and they wait while their community is on the bleeding edge of marijuana policy.

The Underfunded Arm of the Law

If you are farming marijuana in Hayfork, there is relative safety in numbers. To describe the Trinity County Sheriff's department as underfunded is a wild understatement. The department estimates 2,000 marijuana grows in Hayfork and its Trinity Pines subdivision alone. Countywide, the total number of grows is estimated to be thousands more.

Currently, sheriff's deputies number just eight. Coverage for the entire county is provided by one to four officers at any given time. The department faces a hard reality: Marijuana is only one of many competing priorities, stacked against more egregious criminal activity that poses a greater risk to public safety. It doesn't always take priority.

"I have to constantly remind people that we don't just deal with marijuana," explains Sheriff Bruce Haney. "We deal with murders, rapes, assaults, domestic violence. We deal with all of that."

Haney is frustrated by the lack of capacity that prevents the Sheriff's department from managing marijuana, and from demonstrating a greater presence to the illegal growing community.

"I think the message needs to be sent," Haney says. "The reason why we're in the boat that we are in right now is because that message has never been sent to anyone."

For criminal marijuana cases, prioritization boils down to a tension between the threat to the public and circumstance. But the logistics of evidence, immediate need and situation make a systematic prioritization of the worst offenders difficult.

"It's how it falls," says sheriff's deputy Omar Brown. "What's brought across my desk for one reason or another. I don't prioritize. I would never be able to get anything done. Because why would I do a 500 plant grow when I could do a 650 plant grow, you know, so then why would I do that when there could be an 800 plant grow?"

In circumstances where so much of the population is engaging in illegal activity, it becomes harder to identify where the problems really are, to gather evidence and to address them.

The College Graduate

Sam, 35, stumbled into the growing industry almost by accident. He was just out of college and working a job delivering furniture and mattresses for about $800 a month. He was living on Top Ramen, studying for the LSATs, and trying to figure out a viable path for the future when a friend called, saying he needed some help in Hayfork and asking if he'd come out.

Q: And so you heard you could come work on a grow and thought you would come and do it?

Sam: I figured I would try it. I only planned to help for that one time, for that season, and I was going to be in and out, you know, and save money for whatever I did next.

Law enforcement is also just one arm of the legal system. Criminal prosecution and regulation systems require two streams of funding — one for law enforcement and one for judicial systems. The Trinity County Superior Court system falls in line with the familiar blues song of the rural and underfunded. Sinking under an abundance of cases, the court often takes a lengthy amount of time to address criminal marijuana cases and, like the sheriff's department, prosecutors need to prioritize cases that are most relevant to public safety.

Q: And then what happened?

Sam: I got stuck in the honey trap, the magnet.

Q: What's the magnet?

Sam: The magnet is the money. Because, you know, I'm not the only one. You come off a really low salary and you're living hand to mouth, and you come out here and for relatively — you know you work hard, don't get me wrong — but the compensation relative to the work is amazing. You would go from making $800 a month to $3,000 a month. Which is insane. It's an insane jump. I mean, you don't even know what to do with it at first. It's like, 'I guess I'll just eat more pizza or drink more beer.' ... You calibrated yourself to living as poor. And suddenly there is just like all this extra money pouring in.

So even if the Sheriff's Department does take action, prosecution isn't always a sure thing. Sometimes cases don't make it to court for months or even years.

"I'm not faulting the DA because he's in the same boat," says Haney. "He has to prioritize. We have a 600-plant marijuana case that's been sitting on his desk scheduled to go to trial, but he's got three murder trials. So guess where that one's going to — the bottom of the list."

As a result of systemic funding and capacity issues, marijuana cultivation has become a creeping issue for the sheriff's department. Over time, the absence of enforcement has allowed cultivation to escalate. Not only are more people farming, but their gardens are bigger.

"There are big grows and small grows, but the average is 150 to 200 plants," says Brown. "We can't do search warrants on everything that size. We're so far behind. If we had had (more capacity) 10 years ago, we would be looking at 36-plant grows."

In the end, the sheer prevalence of farming makes it impossible to address the many people doing it illegally. The inability for law enforcement to maintain a strong presence creates a sense of lawlessness, and marijuana production booms — more people farm and they farm bigger. And the eight deputies are left to do triage, doing what they can while Hayfork's hotbox of marijuana farming percolates.

Long-term Definitions

Hayfork is waiting to see what happens next. In 2015, a new state regulatory framework for medical marijuana was introduced, and recreational marijuana legalization is forecasted in the future. The local government is contending with these new state policies while revising its cannabis cultivation ordinances, adding an additional layer to rules that will decide the legal size and scale of farming.

The unique conditions of Hayfork's rural context will shape the future of its marijuana boom. Rural communities witness firsthand the irrevocable marks natural resource economies make on the land: ravaged landscapes, clear cutting, overuse of land and water. They house the actors of industry, and are observers of the accumulation of damage. They live the perilous wilds of reactive land management, always arriving late without having the tools to clean up.

For Hayfork, the twin unknowns of economy and environment are the central questions that will shape the future of the community. The marijuana industry has the potential to alter the economy of the town in a positive and sustainable way, or to follow a pattern of boom and bust economics, leaving the community in a post-marijuana aftermath of environmental damage and economic collapse. ●

Summer pleasures

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

Key Player

Some of us leap flip-flop first into summer at the first hiss of lawn sprinklers. For the rest of us, zipping up our hoodies in vampiric fear of the sun and denial over the year whizzing by, a little incentive is required. A slice of Key lime pie will help.

There is patio seating at Café Nooner (409 Opera Alley, Eureka) for those who are ready for it — otherwise, take the baby step of snagging a window table. The Key lime pie looks like a tall, slick wedge of cheesecake ($4). At the bottom is a pinky-thick graham cracker crust, sandy and salty-caramelized against the sweet and tart, dense filling. It speaks to the kind of beachy pleasures that don't require exercise, more Hemingway-esqe boating around the Florida Keys with a cigar than oceanside yoga in Malibu.

Come out of hibernation, friends. There's pie out here.

Good Decisions

Tucked back from the street, its fence camouflaged with peeling fliers, La Chiquita (1021 I St., Arcata), brick-and-mortar counterpart to the taco truck of the same name, is easily missed on the walk past Los Bagels and Wildwood Music. Luckily, there is the smell of steamy tortillas and carnitas to turn your head.

A news editor who prefers to remain anonymous claims that the beans, rice and homemade flour tortillas are so good that he can be content with a simple bean burrito. But if you want to go past contentment, he suggests the pastor burrito ($6.90).

"Burrito? Yeah. Good choice," says a deeply relaxed customer as we pick up our foil-wrapped bundles at the counter. "You gotta get the hot sauce."

Out in the sunshine at a battered picnic table, taking the first bite into the pliant layers of warm, translucent flour tortilla at the top, we were feeling a little relaxed, too. Inside, the rice and beans are as promised — the coral-colored rice being fluffy and flavorful, and the beans being a well-seasoned mix of black and pinto, half mashed and half whole. And the hunks of pork inside have the juicy richness of fatty, fall-apart carnitas with a red-orange sheen of the chili sauce that gives it a little tang and heat. Bite. Groan. Repeat.

"How was it?" calls our fellow diner, who's pleased to get a thumbs up. As we head out, another patron making the turn onto the patio and up La Chiquita's steps catches his eye. "Yeah," he cheers from his table. "Another good decision."

The Bomber

The Crabs get most of the local press, but the summer sun shines on Bomber Field, too. The Humboldt B-52s haven't got a live band yet but the snack shack platoon is performing this season (Redwood Acres, Eureka). Pay for your entry stamp at the folding table and hook right once inside to find yourself immersed in the sounds of the season: the crack of the bat, applause from the crowd and the surf-like shhhh of the deep fryer.

On a recent evening, the concessions counter was staffed by a pair of towering players who shrugged and grinned as they relayed orders to the pros in the back, a couple of women pivoting in the narrow galley between tubs of shredded lettuce and patties on the hissing grill. As a customer went into a mild panic upon receiving her satellite dish of a quesadilla, we ordered the Bomber Burger with grilled onions ($8).

Your debate over whether the hamburger is a sandwich is rendered irrelevant by this cheese-topped beef patty with lettuce, tomatoes and onions (grilled or raw), all of which is held together by a pair of grilled cheese sandwiches instead of a bun. It's a gimmick that works. The flattened sandwiches are both sturdier and tastier than a standard white bun — also weirdly not as painfully filling as one would imagine eating a cheeseburger and two grilled cheese sandwiches to be. And as you listen to the chosen walk-up music of the next batter, Will Smith's "Wild Wild West," it's a reminder that anything goes in the summer. Well, almost.

Going back for seconds? Tell us where. Share your hot tips about local food by emailing Jennifer@northcoastjournal.com or via Twitter @JFumikoCahill, and the Hum Plate investigative team will check it out. ●

Thinking globally,
looking locally

By Gabrielle Gopinath

artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

Now that it's July, the farmers market has reached max volume and we've got the full scale of summer fruits and vegetables on our collective mind. I'm going to say this means it's a good time to revisit the importance of being local.

Each Saturday morning, the Arcata farmers market serves up a mind-expanding object lesson in the concept foodies call terroir: the idea that agricultural products from a given region taste the way they do because of the unique set of environmental factors that shape their growth. Think of a perfect globe artichoke or a psychedelic-looking stalk of Romanesco broccoli; now imagine that vegetable as a kind of lens that refracts the sun, soil, wind and water that shaped its growth, lending these forces visible and toothsome form. Imagine it again as a record-keeping device, a living thing that bears witness to the events that shaped its time, as the growth rings in a redwood do. Art can also be like that.

Many works of art made in these parts offer a meditation on the unique nature of the place where we live. But some critics counter that the spirit of a place is likely to find its purest expression in artworks that aim to do something — anything — else. Artworks that don't aim to illustrate the genius loci often embody it.

This month's group exhibitions survey a range of themes that are close to Humboldt hearts. The Arcata Artisans' Co-Op Gallery features tropical serigraph subjects by John Wesa and porcelain pandas by Diane Sonderegger. Meanwhile, on the other side of the Plaza, a trio of precocious talents from the Arcata Arts Institute shows recent work at Redwood Yogurt.

Wesa's orchids and hummingbirds vibrate in front of day-glow sunsets; Sonderegger's coyly anthropomorphic pandas flirt, kiss and hold hands. The press release says that the works feature "animal couples experiencing summer romance." These aggressively adorable ceramic miniatures "are intended to show the joys of companionship and love." Given everything I know about the way animal couples experience summer romance, this frankly does not sound like it would be a "family friendly" spectacle, although I can reassure viewers that the panda-on-panda explorations of companionship and love depicted here go no further than first base.

Sonderegger has been a full-time ceramic artist for the past 10 years, while Wesa has been making silkscreens professionally since received his master's degree from Humboldt State University in 1976. Both artists' works display a level of professional craft that speaks to their experience.

The Arcata Arts Institute is a "school within a school" at Arcata High for advanced study in the visual and performing arts. At the G Street yogurt shop, small paintings and graphic works by advanced placement AAI students April Abbott, Sarah Alexander and Brandon Kelsey offer a fun opportunity to contrast three very different styles that have been locally grown in a very literal sense, given the youth of the works' creators.

Abbott's decorative, flatly painted sunsets and seascapes appear to have been fractured and then painstakingly rearranged. The effect is simultaneously regular and random, as though the ocean were being viewed through a camera filter called "mosaic."

Alexander's photographs of brightly lit interiors at night evoke alienation by adopting a literal outsider's perspective. The artist writes that she hopes her images will create "either feelings of isolation and anxiety, comfort and freedom, or a combination of these feelings." Which outcome takes precedence presumably depends on whether a viewer identifies more strongly with the photographs' warm, bright interiors, or with the darkness that surrounds them.

Kelsey's landscapes are executed in a vibrant, high-energy style that seems to reflect the influence of science fiction and computer-generated imagery, as well as the venerable high school tradition of doodling with markers. The one I saw, "Wall II," manages to be both funny and timely in the freewheeling way it mingles local landscape elements with contemporary headlines. A wall has been erected on the border in this alternative reality, although we're not talking about the U.S.-Mexico border; it looks more like a border separating Humboldt from the rest of the world. The wall is a hulk straight out of an Orwellian dystopia — a sinister looking fortification bristling with buttresses and control panels that dwarfs the token redwood growing next to it. In the channel of the river just beyond the wall, the river god, a muscle-bound giant in baby blue, turns his face away.

None of the artworks mentioned here could be described as overtly political. Yet when considered in the aggregate they evoke a range of concerns that are especially germane to this community, from a preoccupation with borders and belonging to a deeply experienced response to the natural world. Modest proposal: Even as we nosh on farmer's market produce, guzzle local brews and lavish our disposable income on Humboldt-made condiments, lotions, T-shirts, hemp wicks and soil amendments, we should also strive to look locally and patronize our area's artists when possible. If you're a locavore, you can also be a locaspectator.

The Arcata Arts Institute's Group Exhibition is on display at Redwood Yogurt during Arts! Arcata, Friday, July 8 from 6 to 9 p.m. Diane Sonderegger and John Wesa's work is featured at Arcata Artisans Co-Op Gallery through July and during Arts! Arcata. ●

Let's Go Get Folked

Humboldt traditions and new blood

By Andy Powell

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

We're a county of music lovers, are we not? Here in Humboldt, we have our fair share of summer music festivals, which probably outdoes many counties with much larger populations. We're also unique — if I may — as we have a high concentration of local musicians who make the pickings for a local festival pretty prime. With that said, one of our most beloved music festivals is upon us. The 38th annual Humboldt Folklife Festival kicks off this Saturday in Blue Lake. Although not a die-hard folkie myself, my wife sits on the Humboldt Folklife Society board (full disclosure No. 1), so I've made it to a few. For some reason, I never before wondered why this festival happens in Blue Lake as opposed to the more populated Arcata or Eureka town centers.

To answer that question, and many others, I sat down with HFS board member Patrick Cleary (one of my many bosses — full disclosure No. 2) at the Mad River Brewery on a recent sunny Friday. Over a happy-hour Jamaica Red, Cleary gave me the quick rundown of the Folklife Festival's history and how it actually began up on Fickle Hill many years ago at the Lazy L Ranch, moved to the Adorni for a year and then found its current home in Blue Lake via Dell'Arte about 15 or 16 years ago. Feel free to ask him for the full story when you see him.

Not only do I love how this festival is completely local, but also how it rotates new musicians and new bands into the lineup each year. Cleary speculated that this year's festival will be about "50/50" in regards to the returning bands and new ones. As mentioned, I'm no die-hard folkie, and the Folklife Festival — thank Jah — doesn't take a purist stance on what "folk" is, which may truly distress a few yokels out there, but allows the vast majority of us to appreciate the wide range of American popular music that still influences local musicians today. You'll of course find fiddles and banjos galore throughout the festival, along with a songwriter's night, country night, bluegrass night, a barn dance and a special tribute to that ol' Telecaster playin', backbeat lovin' rambler Merle Haggard.

It's no small feat to continue a local festival for 38 years and keep the momentum going strong. Many of the volunteers are still the same folks who've been around since the beginning but fortunately there seems to be new blood coming into the organization constantly, which lends hope to the idea that 12 years down the road, when we finish the General Plan Update and the Rolling Stones are on their farewell tour, we'll be able to celebrate the golden anniversary of the Humboldt Folklife Festival here in sunny Blue Lake.

Thursday

There's a sort of musical double header tonight at the Redwood Curtain Brewery in Arcata tonight. Starting off around 4 p.m. is "One-Man-Psychedelic-Acoustiloop" rocker Holus Bolus who's kicking off a three state tour tonight. With live looping capabilities he'll slowly create a full band sound with splashes of psychedelic rock, and reggae grooves. The tail end of this free double header is Humboldt's favorite Beatles tribute, Silver Hammer, who'll be bringing the skelter closer to 8 p.m. tonight. Not too far away, over at The Miniplex with be Kiwi rocker Gate all the way out from New Zealand. Rounding out this 9 p.m. bill are two "multi-platform" artists from L.A., Gabbie Strong and Christopher Reid Martin with local support provided by Bandon Wayne's Ghoulhand. $7 for this four-band bill tonight. While at the Mad River Brewery this past Friday, I was apparently — and luckily enough — sitting next to a chap who turned out to be Kaptain Kirk. After a quick introduction he asked if I could help get his show listed on the NCJ Calendar via his smartphone — I couldn't. (Editor's note: Rest easy, Kap, it's in there.) However, let me do what I can here by sharing the information with you that he'll be playing

Gipsy Moon plays HumBrews at 9 p.m. on Friday, July 8. Courtesy of the artists at the Logger Bar tonight at 9 p.m. for free and you won't be disappointed.

Friday

It's Arts Arcata so you know there'll be a lot going on around the Plaza starting around 6 p.m. with a lot of music happening in the stores. If you stick around Arcata, head on over to Humboldt Brews as it will be hosting rocky mountain Gypsy groovers Gipsy Moon at 9 p.m. You'll hear mandolin, guitar, banjo, bass, harmonies, etc. from these nature lovers who are "constantly reinventing their version of indie-folk to include Celtic melodies, Latin rhythms, jazzy vocals, bluegrass drive and a Gypsy swing that brings acoustic music into an exciting new dimension. A blending of genres that hippies and poets, lovers and dancers, freaks and families alike can all come together to sing and dance until the sun comes up." So there's that. $10 for this adventure. Kingfoot returns to the Logger Bar at 9 p.m. for free so that's the Blue Lake news for the night.

Saturday

The Humboldt Folklife Festival kicks off today, and you can find more information about this week long festival in our calendar section. But speaking of Blue Lake, at the Logger Bar, there's a new group playing. I'm unclear if this is a one-off gig, or if we'll be hearing more from this duo, but if The Dead are your thing, check out Shotgun Ragtime Duo, comprised of Piet Dalmon and Norman Bradford, bringing you acoustic versions of your favorite Grateful songs. It's a 9 p.m. show and it's free.

Sunday

If you haven't found the time to catch Dee Hemingway at The Lighthouse Grill in Trinidad yet, now's your chance. She'll be there at 5 p.m. and won't be asking for any of your money — but feel free to share. Also, if you missed Silver Hammer and their local Beatle-mania earlier this week, you can find them for free tonight at the Logger Bar in Blue Lake at 8 p.m. Be prepared to sing along to your favorite fab-four ditties.

Monday

Up from Los Angeles, '60s garage-blues rockers The Bloodhounds will be playing a rare and cheap show tonight at The Jam in Arcata around 10 p.m. for only $1. Before and between their rock sets, there will be some garage rock DJ sets to keep the tunes coming while the band takes a break. Wear your best worst denim.

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com.

Andy Powell is a congenital music lover and hosts The Night Show on KWPT 100.3 FM weeknights at 6 p.m. Q: Why weren't there any banjos in Star Trek? A: Because it took place in the future.

The 38th annual Humboldt Folklife Festival, July 9-16, is a week-long celebration of local live music against the backdrop of beautiful Blue Lake. Officially part of Dell'Arte's Mad River Festival and presented by the Humboldt Folklife Society, the event strings together an assemblage of the area's finest folk, bluegrass and country musicians for nightly performances, two all-day festivals and a high-stepping barn dance.

The fun starts Saturday, July 9 at Mad River Brewing Company with the Festival Kick-off party featuring live music by the Bayou Swamis and The Trouble, 6 p.m. (free). On Sunday, gather the family for all-day fun during Annie & Mary Day at Perigot Park from noon to 5 p.m. (free). Monday's Kids' Carnival takes place under the Dell'Arte Big Top Tent starting at 6 p.m. (free for kids 12 and under).

Evening musical performances hosted by Dell'Arte fill out the week starting with Songwriters Night on Tuesday, July 12 at the Carlo Theatre at 7:30 p.m. ($8, $6 members), Country Night on Wednesday, July 13 in the Rooney Amphitheatre at 6 p.m. ($10, free for kids under 12), and Bluegrass Night on Thursday, July 14 at the Rooney Amphitheatre at 6 p.m. ($10, free kids under 12). Things get swingin' at the Barn Dance Friday, July 15 at Arcata Veteran's Hall at 7 p.m. ($7), and wind up with the All Day Free Festival on Saturday, July 16 at Dell'Arte boasts two stages of music, workshops, a kid's activity tent, food and so much fun in the sun. And, if you find you still haven't had your fill, there's more live music every night at 9 p.m. at the Logger Bar (free). Whew. Put a folk it in it.

SWISS ARMY MAN. If we're being honest, Humboldt County doesn't really have the best track record when it comes to recent movie production. Sure, we get a little thrill of pride and recognition when Hollywood comes to town, but this fades when home becomes the blurry backdrop for yet another nondescript, low-to-mid-level thing that fails to register in the collective cultural consciousness. Outbreak (1995) felt like something of a moment, and a few local businesses still make hay out of Dustin Hoffman's light, passing praise for their establishments. Many eagerly mention Jurassic Park (1993) or The Empire Strikes Back (1980) as parts of the County's cinematic CV, and we did play host to Bobcat Goldthwait's Willow Creek (2013), which showcased some of the area's more ... unique aspects so vividly that audiences might imagine they were manufactured for the production. On the wider stage, we have most recently been affiliated with the bloated, forgettable Smith family/Shyamalan collective bad idea After Earth (2013). The less said about it the better.

Which is a long way around to Swiss Army Man, which famously brought Daniel Radcliffe to a Eureka Denny's and which goes a long way toward erasing the bad memories of Hollywood's last, disastrous misadventure on the North Coast.

A bearded castaway named Hank (Paul Dano) is, literally and otherwise, at the end of his rope. Marooned on a tiny island somewhere in the Pacific, his already delicate mental state eroded by isolation, thirst and hunger, Hank has decided to end it all by hanging. Just as he tightens the noose and steps off the ice chest-cum-gallows, he meets a new friend. Well, a flatulent corpse in a blue suit washes up at the shoreline. After an awkward introduction, Hank concludes that life may be worth living, after all. The corpse, who is called Manny (Radcliffe), relents to be ridden, in Hank's words "like a jet ski," his voluminous gas propelling the duo effortlessly across the white caps. They make landfall soon enough and begin an arduous overland journey of survival and mutual self-discovery. In bringing Manny back to some form of life, Hank must visit his own darker corners, confronting a lifetime of fear, loneliness and daddy issues. Manny, having in death lost his frame of reference, becomes Hank's therapist in a way, an unbiased advocate motivated only by friendship and curiosity. He also becomes a sort of multi-purpose tool, as fresh water runs from his mouth, his erection indicates magnetic North and rocks shoot from his mouth like bullets. Yeah, it's different than most movies.

Written and directed by Daniel Kwan and Daniel Scheinert (who credit themselves as "Daniels," which is so cute I almost left the theater), Swiss Army Man is an imperfect but vividly, full-bloodedly imagined work of art. There are moments, as when Hank and Manny recreate moments from Hank's life with found objects and forest matter, that veer queasily close to preciousness. But the force of the Daniels' vision, the honesty of the feelings at its base and the economical ingenuity of their movie-making easily win the day. And it doesn't hurt that Dano and Radcliffe both give fine, humane, hilarious performances in weird, distinctive, sometimes painfully relatable roles. This is the kind of movie our kooky county would do well to be identified by. R. 117M. BROADWAY.

THE BFG. The movies of Steven Spielberg were, in my childhood, rivaled in ubiquity perhaps only by the books of Roald Dahl. As a pre-adolescent, the discovery of Dahl's canon was like learning how to breathe, only better. He created worlds so enchanting and inviting that moving into them was effortless, like drifting into blissful, dream-filled sleep. Simultaneously, Spielberg was informing me with his equally friendly, innocent-populist fantasias. (I would go through a period, after my discovery of Scorsese and Coppola by way of Tarantino, of Spielberg denigration. In that prickly time, I mistook the joy and ease of his work for simplicity or naiveté. It would take some years and living of life to realize my mistake.) So it seems completely natural to me that Spielberg would take on the adaptation of one of Dahl's most distinctive books.

Sophie (Ruby Barnhill), an insomniac and so the last one left awake in her orphanage, hears strange noises in the road late one night. She pulls back the curtains and is spirited away by a giant, a Big Friendly one (Mark Rylance). He carries her off to Giant Country, concerned she might tell someone of his existence. He means Sophie no harm, of course; he's a gentle guy in the business of dream collection and distribution. The nine giants with whom he shares his country, though, are made of different stuff. To a one, they have given themselves over to snatching and eating "human beans" and tormenting the BFG, the runt of their dysfunctional family. So while he must conceal and protect Sophie, she must help him to become strong and self-reliant.

I don't have to sell this story; it's one of the best. Barnhill and Rylance make a sweet, memorable duo, and Spielberg uses some of his trademark technique to imbue the movie's atmosphere with wonder and possibility. The script sags pretty heavily in the later going, unfortunately, but the magic of its premise and the escapist joy of the first act endure. PG. 120M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE. This buddy/spy comedy has a serviceable story about a former dweeb who becomes a ripped CIA operative (Duane Johnson) and a popular guy disappointed with his adult life (Kevin Hart). But the leads' chemistry and charm makes going to the reunion worth it. PG13. 107M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

FINDING DORY. Ellen DeGeneres voices the friendly fish with the fried short-term memory (anybody relate?) who's searching for the rest of her long lost blue tang clan. With Albert Brooks and Ed O'Neill. PG. 97M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

FREE STATE OF JONES. Matthew McConaughey, Gugu Mbatha-Raw and Mahershala Ali star in a Civil War action drama about white farmers and slaves forming an armed rebellion against the Rebels. Don't wear your Skynyrd T-shirt with the Confederate flag. R. 139M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

INDEPENDENCE DAY: RESURGENCE. Another alien invasion brings back most of the old crew (Bill Pullman, Jeff Goldblum, and hey, Vivica Fox) and some young'uns (Liam Hemsworth, Jessie T. Usher) to defend the earth, if not its architecture. PG13. 120M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

LEGEND OF TARZAN. After his Victorian makeover, Tarzan (Alexander Skarsgård) reverts to his chest-pounding ways to rescue his bride from a Belgian baddie. PG13. 87M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

THE NEON DEMON. Director Nicholas Winding Refn's film about an ingénue (Elle Fanning) modeling in Los Angeles is a vicious fever dream about beauty, hate and envy with a signature graphic climax. R. 117M. BROADWAY.

NOW YOU SEE ME 2. But maybe you don't have to. This sequel about do-gooder magicians can't pull the same rabbit out of its hat as the original, despite a charming ensemble cast and fancy illusions. Starring Mark Ruffalo, Morgan Freeman and Daniel Radcliffe. PG13. 115M. BROADWAY.

THE PURGE: ELECTION YEAR. So they're still making these. This one has Leo (Frank Grillo) running the gauntlet with an anti-annual-murderous-free-for-all politician (Elizabeth Mitchell). R. 139M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

THE SHALLOWS. Blake Lively plays a surfer trapped by a shark close to shore. It's entertaining and Lively is up to the challenge, but the story could use more bite. PG13. 87M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF LAURIE JEANNE ANDERSON WAINWRIGHT, also known as LAURIE WAINWRIGHT, also known as LAURIE ANDERSON

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, LAURIE JEANNE ANDERSON WAINWRIGHT, also known as LAURIE WAINWRIGHT, also known as LAURIE ANDERSON A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner, George J. Wainwright

In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that George J. Wainwright be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent. THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority. A HEARING on the petition will be held on July 14, 2016 at 2:00 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 8. IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

due. NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call (888) 988-6736 or visit this Internet Web site: salestrack.tdsf.com, using the file number assigned to this case B547833 B. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. If the Trustee is unable to convey title for any reason, the successful bidder's sole and exclusive remedy shall be the return of monies paid to the Trustee and the successful bidder shall have no further recourse. If the sale is set aside for any reason, the Purchaser at the sale shall be entitled only to a return of the monies paid.
